Dublin, March 13. 1856

Dear Mr Macy — The bags from and the two parcels came to hand yesterday In the first place, there was a delay from the box not being consigned to J. R. Graves, Liverpool, which would have greatly hastened it. However, there was still a delay even after he took it in hand, and another in the Dublin delivery. When I left it, no tidings was yet. I have sent off the parcels for Leeds, Scotland, London, & Bristol and paid the freight for them at the Land Office within the last hour. The sooner brother, that sick so-called Lent is over now. he gets ready today The books for Liverpool & Manchester for the which a part of the way by a set of W. P. Smith's travellers. I have been exceedingly busy and anxious within the past fortnight, & perhaps a sick night have been lost — but I am sure if you knew the peculiar circumstances I have had to contend with, you would excuse the delay — which I cannot think of much consequence. The books are much called for than usual this year. In sending them on, I try every convenient to lessen the cost to you. Every thing for brief than- tuneau (from Mrs C.) shall be in English. The Bible paid out in one to a friend of mine in London, who will send it on.

The cheapest way to send the things to Schoolcher is by post— they can reach him for 1/4 which is less than by regular parcel conveyance.

Do you know that an account of that (on each) of the prevalent feeling in your country respecting a quarrel with England, I sent your letter to Lord Carlisle (the Lord Lieutenant here) thinking that the person of one in whom he can confide is important for our government to learn. Nothing can be further from the intentions of the English people than a quarrel with the United States. I am astonished that a friendly feeling is so nearly universal as it is. Both to feeling to it. I sent your letter because it fascinated its own seriousness. By sending it, I lost you them. of the cut of the book. Parker's Portrait was a dollar — Phys. of marriage I think 62 cents — & Mrs Hunt's book, I think a dollar. Both the last are for a friend. Excuse the use I made of your letter which I may have seen — for the East of course don't know me, & may think me intrusive — but I think we should do what we can to promote correct knowledge on the part of government, under such circumstances as the present. Long live to hunder a fortnight and luncheon quarrel

I observe that Joseph Barker is evidently sorry for the very unhandsome way he spoke about Stephen Yates. He can't help his temper when his foe is in hands. I think I clearly understand Yates objection to published statements of the kind he used to persuade himself that they meant that they hinder the cause they meant to promote. But I don't like his Pilkington's ~~unbecoming~~ unbecoming, obstinate style of condemning. I do not approve of that J. J. Yates for Barker really provocation but ought to forgive his low style of attack. Barker has undoubtedly a quick temper & talk & seems besides great ability - but I guess that he has a great fear for his position & influence & means of support. wealth stands for the sake of independence. I don't think Ewd Miller but I can't Ewd can be just Herbert.

Write Ewd and E. L. don't be troubled heavy heard of our R. D. W. but when he and to exchange a letter now & then in former vein. How is W. Pilkington and what is he doing?

What does Ewd think of my letter to Howard W? - Did they. Mrs Murray? Did Ewd see her - What does Mrs Fillmore think of her? - Did Jarman & Pilkington need her in Boston. Is she not odious?

I had the pleasure of a letter from A. W. Weston from London — by her desire sent this letter on to Mrs Sutton.
I suppose A. W. W. is now on her way to Italy. I hear very little from Mrs Sutton of late. She has had whooping cough, with her, and some times complains her an an inconvenient but the hardy water at ah herself, and in, I suppose, quality enlarges on some case or other.
Rogers, although (by Mr Sutton's desire) on leave, has this particular from Julia Sutton and Mama both, who lately sent an affectionate letter for general perusal to Joseph Hunt, who has sent it round the country to damage the Rev.
A. L. Young. The details in it particulars infinitely my family intends to fighten people against the Establishment.
& manages false impressions and displays a great want of delicacy and I might say humanity in the revelations & makes of private conversations with relatives & friends and of mine. I mean to send on the letter. I sent Mrs Sutton her copy. P. Pillsbury and I hope to have to night, to pay his last visit to Ireland.

He is to come from Ypres today — and [illegible] intends [illegible] found the Richards house deserted to the fears and before he [illegible] at our door about 11 tonight.

I have no wish that any thing should be done to interfere with the arrangements you have made. If we cannot keep it safe, let it go. However lately we have taken a heavy fall in funds I fear I shall find it difficult to keep it going so smoothly as hitherto — but I will do my best. Mrs Gen thanks Mr. Mr for his last pleasant [illegible] letter — which I hope to answer before long

Now I must thank Mr Lord Carlisle called with your letter & kept me talking — & I thank him for the interview & must immediately stop

Yours ever
Florence
